Two-time NBA Most Valuable Player and reigning NBA Finals MVP Giannis Antetokounmpo is currently in the league's COVID-19 protocol and will be out for the remainder of the week.

Love my boys 🧡🧡

With COVID hitting U.S. professional sports hard this past week, Giannis was one of the many athletes who need to miss ten days. Giannis has been busy the last few months, though, as he and girlfriend Mariah Riddlesprigger announced the birth of their second son, who was born in September.

The child, named Maverick, joins older brother Liam, who was born in February 2020, and Giannis is thrilled to have two sons. “The Greek Freak” celebrated his 27th birthday two weeks ago and in this Youtube link, you can watch the 27 greatest plays of his career so far. He recently passed 13,000 career points in the NBA already, ranking him 210th in the history of the league, which is impressive for someone still so young. He remains, along with Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and LeBron James, one of three players to win an NBA title and two MVPs before their 27th birthdays. After a rough start to this season, his Milwaukee Bucks seem to have righted the ship and are no longer recovering from the dreaded “Finals Hangover.” Giannis completely expects his Bucks to make another deep run in the NBA playoffs next spring.

NO GREEK BOYCOTT OF WINTER OLYMPICS

With the Winter Olympics less than two months away, Greece has stated they will not be boycotting the games. U.S. Government officials announced a “diplomatic boycott” of the Beijing, China games as officials will not attend but athletes will. European Parliament is calling for a full boycott of the games based on China’s human rights abuses and U.K. Prime Minister Boris Johnson said he is working on a British boycott. Greek Deputy Minister of Sports Lefteris Avgenakis is currently the only Greek official who is scheduled to go to Beijing. The good news for Greeks, though, is that they will be present and will be competing. The Olympics are currently scheduled for February 4th-20th.
